As Good As It Gets For You and Your Pets!

Pet Vaccinations

Pet vaccinations (shots) are very important to your pet's health. Dogs and cats are at risk of contacting contagious diseases when exposed to other animals and the environment. Vaccinations help protect your pet from these diseases. Dogs and cats routinely receive vaccinations from when they are a couple of months old and then as needed throughout their lives. Some vaccinations are done annually. Some vaccinations are done every third year. The list of the following vaccinations are done for your dog and cat: As a veterinarian and as part of the Mobile Veterinary Services of Western Massachusetts we are aware of the risks involved to your pet in the local area. Rabies vaccinations are required by the state, all others are optional.

The following are links to information about veterinary health and of veterinary medical conditions that you might have questions about. Most of the information has been reviewed by a veterinarian and found to be accurate and helpful. Please be aware that any of the information that you find on these web pages should be used as only a reference and only to help supplement information given to you by Dr Sidorsky and the Mobile Veterinary House Call Service of Western Massachusetts.

Because of the shorter lifespan of our pets, we stress the importance of an annual physical examination. Thorough check-ups and preventive care can help alleviate serious health problems. Physical Examination:

Advantages of Veterinary House calls

House call veterinarians offer many conveniences that traditional animal hospitals cannot. One of the biggest of those is overcoming the fear and trauma that many animals experience when taken from their home to a veterinary hospital. Many animals release pheromones (chemical scent signals) under traumatic conditions that linger in the air and may cause fear reactions in animals that detect them.

In addition to the benefits for your pet, a house call may make more sense for many owners. Since you won't have to gather up your pets, drive to the clinic, wait to see the veterinarian and drive back home, there is less time wasted for you. Frequently, house call veterinarians offer greater freedom in scheduling appointments. You will also receive more personalized attention and, generally, an extended period of time spent with the veterinarian. Many house call veterinarians also provide emergency care for their clients.

By examining your pet in its own environment where it is more secure, your housecall veterinarian can better evaluate behavior and conditions which may be caused or aggravated by their environment. In addition, there is a lower risk of being exposed to diseases that may be floating around in a hospital waiting room. This is especially important for very young or very old pets that do not have good immunity and for pets with weakened immune systems.

Animal Behavior

Dogs and cats can have behavior problems that can be both difficult to understand and difficult to treat. To help with these issues Dr. Sidorsky can recommend professional behaviorists and trainers. Copied below is information about two specific professionals.

Dog and Cat Behavior:

Dog and cat behavior problems can be very frustrating and difficult to deal with and require a unique perspective and training. Dr Kati Warubel has offered to be available for consultation for our clients around these issues. The following is a short note from her.

Dr Wrubel: "We love our pets, but we don't always love all of the ways in which our pets behave. Depending upon the severity of the issue you are facing the quality of your life, that of your pet and that of others you share your life with, can be directly affected. If your dog or cat has a behavior issue and you would like some help, please call or make an appointment. We are here to help. Treatment options for behavior issues include gentle training, a personalized behavior modification plan, and mood-stabilizing medication depending on the situation. Every case is different and every animal is treated as an individual. If you feel you or someone you know has a pet who may be in need of assistance, click here for more information.
